BUSY-MAN AND WIFE.

A Play in One Gasp.

By L. R. S. HENDERSON.

Scene—A pretty little breakfast room in the home of Mr. John Smith, the "Busy Man." Mr. Smith is seen engrossed in the stock news in the morning paper, while Mrs. Smith is charming in a pale blue negligee and sips her coffee with an "I've-made-up-my-mind" air.

His Wife: John, will you do me a favor?

The Busy Man (without looking up from his paper): Yes, my dear, what is it?

His Wife (nervously): Well, —er—I—

Busy Man (impatiently): Hurry, my dear, what is it?

His Wife: I have a confession to make, John.

Busy Man: Don't bother; confessions take up so much valuable time.

His Wife (wistfully): I don't love you any more.

(Busy Man continues reading his paper.)

His Wife (angrily): Didn't you hear what I said?

Busy Man (apparently annoyed at the interruption): Yes, that's all right; that's all right; don't worry.

His Wife (decidedly): But I want you to get a divorce from me!

Busy Man (exasperated): Isn't that just like a woman! Now, you know, Helen, that I can't take the time from my business for anything so frivolous.

(Returns to paper.)

His Wife (leaning forward): But, John, I love someone else. You—

Busy Man (without glancing up): Of course; of course. (To himself.) Sugar has gone up again.

His Wife (sitting very straight): AND, JOHN SMITH, I AM GOING TO RUN AWAY WITH HIM!!

Busy Man (rising and pushing his chair back): Please yourself, my dear, only don't expect me to see you off or attend to any of the little details of your departure, because, just now, I am so busy—haven't a minute—must rush to the office now. (Turning at the door.) Shall I see you again?

His Wife (helpless and tearful): Well, if that's the way you are going to act, John Smith, I shall stay right here—you've just spoiled it all!

(Exit John.)

(Curtain.)
